Family law – Matrimonial assets – Division

Family law – Maintenance

Family law – Custody

Insolvency law – Bankruptcy – Effect on matrimonial jurisdiction to divide assets

27 July 2015

Vinodh Coomaraswamy J:

Introduction

1 The wife commenced these proceedings on 27 January 2011 seeking divorce on grounds of the husband's unreasonable behaviour. The husband initially defended the proceedings but withdrew his defence in exchange for the wife's agreement to remove by amendment certain allegations in her statement of particulars. The wife amended her particulars as agreed and secured an uncontested interim judgment on 25 October 2011. [\[note: 1\]](#)

2 I now have to determine the ancillary matters. They comprise: (i) division of the parties' matrimonial assets; (ii) maintenance for the wife and for the triplets; and (iii) custody of and access to the triplets. No issue arises as to care and control of the triplets: it is common ground that their care and control should rest with the wife.

3 Having considered all of the evidence and submissions, I have decided:

- (a) That a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets is to award 60% to the wife and 40% to the husband;
- (b) That the wife should receive no maintenance for herself but shall be given liberty to apply in the future for maintenance if circumstances change;
- (c) That the husband shall pay lump sum maintenance to the wife for the triplets which I have fixed at a little over $325,000, to be paid to the wife out of the husband's share of matrimonial assets;
- (d) That the wife shall have sole custody of the triplets; and

(e) That the husband shall have only supervised access to the triplets, limited to two hours a week.

4 The husband has appealed against my decision. I now give my reasons.

The history of the marriage

5 The husband and the wife married on 9 April 1996. Soon after they married, the husband invited the wife to join his family's packaging business. She did so. [\[note: 2\]](#) The husband and wife subsequently left the husband's family's business and set up their own sole proprietorship known as [P]. They subsequently transferred ownership of [P] to a company known as [Q] Pte Ltd. The husband and the wife each control 50% of the shares in [Q] Pte Ltd, but the husband is the sole director. [\[note: 3\]](#) In addition to carrying on business in its own right, [Q] Pte Ltd was also the holding company for the couple's other businesses which included a piano shop and a spa.

April 2009 – the husband discloses his homosexuality to the wife

6 Sometime in 2008, the wife noticed that the husband was acting odd and had withdrawn from the family. He would go out alone and return home drunk, late at night. He began sleeping separately from the wife. [\[note: 4\]](#)

7 The wife was concerned about the change in the husband's behaviour. In January 2009, she engaged a private investigator to conduct surveillance on the husband. The investigator's report revealed that, unknown completely to the wife, the husband was actively and promiscuously pursuing homosexual liaisons. The wife confronted the husband with the evidence. He revealed that he was homosexual and admitted that he was engaging in homosexual liaisons. [\[note: 5\]](#)

8 The wife and the husband agreed to undergo counselling in order to try to save their marriage. In April 2009, at the first counselling session, the husband disclosed to the wife that he was HIV positive. [\[note: 6\]](#)

9 From the last quarter of 2009, the husband began spending weekends and other stretches of a few days away from his wife and family. He did so without informing the wife where he was or what he was doing during these absences. [\[note: 7\]](#) The husband's conduct naturally caused the wife distress.

January 2010 – the wife moves out of the matrimonial home

10 In January 2010, the wife concluded that the husband was not serious about trying to salvage their marriage. She moved out of the matrimonial home in Sembawang, taking the triplets with her. [\[note: 8\]](#)

February 2010 – personal protection order

11 In February 2010, the wife sought a personal protection order against the husband to restrain the husband from committing family violence on her and on the triplets. [\[note: 9\]](#) The wife's application was based on three grounds: (i) battery committed by the husband on the wife in March 2004 and in February 2010; (ii) the husband's use of physical force on one of the triplets in May 2010; [\[note: 10\]](#) and (iii) the husband's screaming rages against the other two of the triplets which had put them in serious fear of him. [\[note: 11\]](#)

12 On 24 February 2010, the wife secured an expedited order under s 66 of the Women's Charter (Cap 353, 2009 Rev Ed) ("Women's Charter") restraining the husband from committing family violence on her and on the triplets. [\[note: 12\]](#) The personal protection proceedings then went on to a full hearing which took place in October 2010. Witnesses on both sides were examined and cross-examined. The wife relied on her own evidence. She also relied on the evidence of four of her colleagues. They all gave evidence of the husband's battery of the wife in February 2010. The battery took place at the parties' workplace in Serangoon, at a time when she had already left the matrimonial home. On that day, the wife returned to the workplace against the husband's wishes. The husband attempted to remove her by force, in the presence of several others including the four colleagues who gave evidence.

13 The husband's battery of the wife was real in that the husband applied physical force to the wife's person without her consent. It was not, however, serious in that it did not cause the wife serious physical injuries. Nevertheless, there is no doubt that she was distressed by the battery and deeply humiliated by the circumstances in which it took place.

14 The husband all but admitted his battery. In his written submission to the District Judge – written personally by the husband as he was then, as now, acting in person – the husband explained that he had been provoked. [\[note: 13\]](#) The husband's explanation to the District Judge, in words unmediated by a lawyer, is as follows: [\[note: 14\]](#)

...the occurrence ...happened naturally as a result of the necessity to enforce order in the discharge of office and family duty. As head of the family, submission is expected in those 2 situations when the incidence [sic] [of force used against the wife] occurred. And as head of family business, it is difficult to accept public display of insubordination or challenge of command and control. It would not be practical to always enlist the assistance of police to vacate a family member to settle domestic [and] business affairs which are also domestic in nature for affairs relating [to] husband and wife.

15 To support her case in the personal protection proceedings, the wife relied also on the evidence of the triplets. But to spare them the trauma of cross-examination, she invited the District Judge to speak to the triplets in chambers. At the husband's insistence, however, the triplets were compelled to give evidence formally and were subjected to the ordeal of cross-examination, albeit by video-link. The husband was, as I have said, acting in person in the personal protection proceedings. His decision therefore deliberately put his young children in a position where they would have to be subjected to cross-examination by their own father.

16 After hearing all the evidence, the District Judge granted the wife a personal protection order against the husband. [\[note: 15\]](#) The District Judge, however, declined to grant the triplets a personal protection order against the husband. He held that such an order was not necessary for their protection within the meaning of s 65 of the Women's Charter. [\[note: 16\]](#) The factual basis for an order protecting the children, however, was largely undisputed.

17 The District Judge also ordered the husband to pay to the wife the costs of the personal protection proceedings fixed at $15,000. [\[note: 17\]](#) The husband has yet to pay these costs.

March 2010 – the wife sets up her own business

18 In March 2010, after leaving the matrimonial home, the wife set up her own business known as [R] Pte Ltd. This is a company with a paid up share capital of $100,000 out of which the wife owns 99,000 shares of $1 each. [R] Pte Ltd is in the business of packaging activities.

June 2010 – the wife applies for custody of the triplets

19 After the wife left the matrimonial home in January 2010 with the triplets, she allowed the husband to continue to have access to the triplets. In June 2010, however, the wife applied under the Guardianship of Infants Act (Cap 122, 1985 Rev Ed) for sole custody, care and control of the triplets, with the husband to have only supervised and limited access. She relied on two grounds to support her application. First, she relied on the same history of family violence against herself and the triplets that she had relied on in the personal protection proceedings. Second, she relied on the fact that the husband was in an intimate homosexual relationship with another man and that the two men had slept together on the same bed with the triplets while the triplets were in the husband's care and control. [\[note: 18\]](#)

20 Having heard the parties' submissions, the District Judge ordered that the wife have sole custody, care and control of the triplets with supervised access to the husband and no overnight access. The order fixed the husband's access for two hours a week: on Saturdays from 12.00 noon to 2.00 pm at Woodlands Civic Centre. [\[note: 19\]](#)

21 The District Judge also ordered the husband to pay to the wife the costs of the custody proceedings fixed at $14,000. [\[note: 20\]](#) The husband has yet to pay these costs.

2011 – the husband is charged under the Misuse of Drugs Act

22 In 2011, the husband was charged with five offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act (Cap 185, 2008 Rev Ed). Two of the charges accused him of consuming methamphetamines and phenethylamine, both of those proscribed by the Fourth Schedule to that Act. [\[note: 21\]](#) Three of the charges accused him of being in possession of ketamine, methamphetamine and utensils for the consumption of methamphetamine. [\[note: 22\]](#) On the four most serious charges, the husband faced a maximum penalty of 10 years' imprisonment, a $20,000 fine or both. On the least serious charge, he faced a maximum penalty of 3 years' imprisonment or a $10,000 fine or both.

23 The husband claimed trial to all five charges. In an affidavit filed in these proceedings, he described his defence as follows: [\[note: 23\]](#)

As regards the alleged drug related offences, I am claiming trial as I did not commit the offence. The charges related to offences committed abroad and I have instructed my solicitors to claim trial as the alleged drugs belonged to my friend and not me.

24 The husband was found guilty on all charges. He was jailed from April 2013 to September 2013. [\[note: 24\]](#)

2012 – the husband is adjudicated bankrupt

25 In November 2012, the husband was adjudicated a bankrupt on the application of the United Overseas Bank Ltd. The debt arose from the husband's liability as a guarantor for a loan taken out by one of the couple's businesses to purchase a car. [\[note: 25\]](#)

26 A bankruptcy has the potential to exercise a profound effect on the division of matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter. I analyse these effects in detail at [108]–[126] below. My conclusion there is that, on the facts of this case, the husband's bankruptcy does not prevent me from exercising my jurisdiction to divide in a just and equitable manner the couple's matrimonial assets. I therefore now consider what such a division would entail.

Division of matrimonial assets

The parties' assets

27 The parties have disclosed in their affidavits of assets and means total assets worth $2,650,747.54 falling into three parts: (i) jointly-held assets worth $1,298,491.94; (ii) assets in the wife's name worth $767,805.94; and (ii) assets in the husband's name worth $584,449.66.

Assets in joint names

28 The jointly-held assets comprise the following:

- (a) The sum of $298,491.94 held by Mallal & Namazie as stakeholders. This sum represents the net proceeds of the sale of the parties' co-owned matrimonial home in Sembawang which they sold in 2011.
- (b) A landed property in Serangoon. The husband values this property at $1m. [\[note: 26\]](#) The wife does not give it a value but does not dispute the husband's value.
- (c) A joint account with OCBC. [\[note: 27\]](#) There is no evidence of the balance in this account. I have therefore ascribed it a nil value in the division of matrimonial assets. To the extent that there are any funds in this account, the parties are to divide the funds between themselves in the same proportion as I have ordered them to divide the remainder of the matrimonial assets.

Assets in the sole name of the wife

29 The assets in the sole name of the wife comprise the following:

- (a) An NTUC Income life insurance policy with a face value of $40,000 and a surrender value of $30,313.96; [\[note: 28\]](#)
- (b) An NTUC Income life insurance policy with a face value of $46,000 and a bonus sum assured of $7,850; [\[note: 29\]](#)
- (c) An MSIG Insurance life insurance policy with a face value of $75,000 and no surrender value; [\[note: 30\]](#)
- (d) 30% of the issued and paid-up share capital of [Q] Pte Ltd. [\[note: 31\]](#) The husband's evidence is that these shares have no value; [\[note: 32\]](#)
- (e) 99% of the issued and paid up share capital of [R] Pte Ltd valued at $99,000; [\[note: 33\]](#)

- (f) 20,000 shares in ABR Holdings Ltd valued at $11,300; [\[note: 34\]](#)
- (g) 1,836 units in Schroders Global High Yield Fund valued at $1,509.19; [\[note: 35\]](#)
- (h) A current account with DBS with a balance of $10,037.86; [\[note: 36\]](#)
- (i) Cash in hand of about $25,000; [\[note: 37\]](#)
- (j) A receivable of $36,000 due from her brother; [\[note: 38\]](#)
- (k) A safe deposit box said to contain nothing of significant value; [\[note: 39\]](#) and
- (l) $546,794.93 in all three sub-accounts of her CPF account. [\[note: 40\]](#)

Assets in the sole name of the husband

30 The assets in the sole name of the husband comprise the following:

- (a) Two cars on hire-purchase, a Lexus 350 with an estimated value of $80,000 and a Toyota RAV4, with an estimated value of $50,000. [\[note: 41\]](#) Both cars have outstanding loans. The Lexus has since been repossessed for default in payment. The wife has attributed no value to the remaining car [\[note: 42\]](#) and I attribute nil value to it in the division of matrimonial assets.
- (b) Two NTUC Income life insurance policies with combined face values of $100,200 and combined surrender values of $59,592.48; [\[note: 43\]](#)
- (c) Shares in a public company and holdings in three unit trusts valued at $42,496.23; [\[note: 44\]](#)
- (d) Three bank accounts with a combined estimated balance of $4,000; [\[note: 45\]](#) and
- (e) $478,360.95 in all three sub-accounts of his CPF account. [\[note: 46\]](#)

The parties' positions

The wife's position

31 The wife asks that the entirety of the Serangoon property [\[note: 47\]](#) and of the net proceeds of sale of the Sembawang property be transferred to her [\[note: 48\]](#) together with a further $200,000 from the husband's CPF account. [\[note: 49\]](#) She seeks these transfers not only to resolve the division of matrimonial assets but also to resolve, as a lump sum award, her claims for maintenance for herself and for the triplets as well as various other claims she has arising from assets which the husband is alleged to have dissipated or hidden. [\[note: 50\]](#)

The husband's position

32 The husband asks that the entire Serangoon property be transferred to him and that the net proceeds of sale of the Sembawang property be divided equally between the parties. [\[note: 51\]](#) He offers the wife no maintenance at all and proposes that he pay in all $900 per month as maintenance for the triplets. [\[note: 52\]](#)

The law

33 The court's duty under s 112 of the Women's Charter is to divide the parties' matrimonial assets "in such proportion as the court thinks just and equitable".

34 The Court of Appeal in BCB v BCC [2013] 2 SLR 324 ("BCB") set out the following principles which I bear in mind:

- (a) It is fundamental to the proper exercise of the power under s 112 of the Women's Charter that the court use a broad-brush approach (at [7]).
- (b) It is wrong in principle to emphasise unduly or to focus inordinately on each spouse's direct contributions (at [8]). That is only one of the many factors to be considered as part of all the circumstances of the case in exercising the power to arrive at the just and equitable division mandated by s 112(1).
- (c) The court should not adopt the approach taken under the predecessor of s 112 by treating the spouses' direct contributions as the starting point for a just and equitable division, and then making adjustments to account for the spouses' non-financial contributions (at [9]).
- (d) The modern broad-brush approach ensures that the division arrived at by the court gives effect to the important principle that the court must take fully into account all indirect contributions of every type (at [11]) and made by each spouse (at [12] and [34]).

35 The Court of Appeal has more recently made more explicitly the break with the previous approach to the division of matrimonial assets. In its very recent decision in ANJ v ANK [2015] SGCA 34 ("ANJ"), the Court of Appeal cautioned – once again – against the approach of taking the parties' direct contributions as the starting point and adding an uplift to account for their respective indirect contributions. Adopting that approach carries the risk both of undervaluing and of overvaluing non-financial contributions: ANJ at [19] and [20]. Both outcomes are contrary to the duty under s 112 of the Women's Charter to arrive at a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets.

36 The Court of Appeal suggested instead adopting the following structured four-step approach (at [22] to [29]):

- (a) First, derive a ratio which represents the relationship between the direct financial contributions of each party towards the acquisition or improvement of matrimonial assets. Where all necessary evidence is available, this is an arithmetical exercise. Where all necessary evidence is not available, the court must use a broad brush to make approximations based on the available documentary evidence and on the parties' own evidence assessed in the light of their veracity.
- (b) Next, derive a second ratio which represents the relationship between the non-financial and indirect financial contributions of each party towards the welfare of the family. This is necessarily a matter of impression and judgment to be approached in broad strokes.
- (c) Then, average the two ratios to derive each party's overall contribution to the family. This average forms the basis for the division of the matrimonial assets.

(d) Finally, make any adjustments which are necessary to arrive at a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets. The necessary adjustment can be made either by increasing or decreasing the average ratio derived in the third step or by attaching greater weight to one of the component ratios derived in the first step or the second step. The adjustment in this final step is a qualitative adjustment based on the court's sense of what is fair and just. It is made to recognise that, in certain cases and on certain facts, one type of contribution may carry greater importance than the other. It is also the opportunity to take into account all the circumstances of the case as well as the factors enumerated in s 112(2) of the Women's Charter other than in s 112(2)(a) and (d).

37 ANJ is a decision which was handed down by the Court of Appeal after I had made my decision in this case. I do not, however, see any impediment to my explaining my reasons for my decision by adopting the structured four step approach set out in it. First, that approach approximates the approach which I actually applied in arriving at my decision. Second, although ANJ's structured four-step approach is new, the policy, principle and precedent underlying it is not new. ANJ is entirely consistent with the case law which precedes it and, in particular, with the principles which I have distilled from BCB and set out above, all of which I applied in arriving at my decision.

38 Applying the approach set out in BCB and in ANJ, it is my view that it would be just and equitable to divide the matrimonial assets so as to award the wife 60% and to award the husband 40%. I arrive at this decision for the following reasons.

Direct contributions

39 Section 112(2)(a) of the Women's Charter provides that one of the circumstances of the case which a court has a duty to have regard to in arriving at a just and equitable division of matrimonial assets is "the extent of the contributions made by each party in money, property or work toward acquiring, improving or maintaining the matrimonial assets".

40 I start by attributing to each spouse, as that spouse's direct contributions, the full value of the assets held in that spouse's name. It therefore remains only for me to assess each spouse's direct contributions to the jointly-owned matrimonial assets.

41 Having attributed a nil value to the parties' joint OCBC account (see [28(c)] above), there are only two jointly-owned matrimonial assets which I need to analyse:

(a) The fund of $298,491.94 held by the law firm of Mallal & Namazie representing the net proceeds of sale of the matrimonial home in Sembawang; and

(b) The property in Serangoon owned jointly by the two spouses.

42 In order to assess each spouse's direct contributions to the Sembawang property, it is necessary to start the analysis with the couple's first matrimonial home: an HDB flat in Jalan Bahagia.

Jalan Bahagia

43 The flat in Jalan Bahagia was purchased for $227,000 in 1995 [\[note: 53\]](#) and sold for $550,000 in late 1997 or early 1998. [\[note: 54\]](#) The husband's account of the acquisition and sale of Jalan Bahagia is as follows: [\[note: 55\]](#)

... we co-habited at a HDB flat at ... Jalan Bahagia ... which was bought in the joint names of [my] mother and me. Upon our marriage in 1996, the Plaintiff insisted on adding her name to the flat and I removed [my] mother's name from the flat as I was very much in love with [the plaintiff]. The Plaintiff never contributed towards the purchase or maintenance of the flat. Subsequently, the flat was sold and I purchased [the Serangoon property] in 2003. I paid 20% of the purchase price in cash and took a loan from Hong Leong Finance. The loan has been fully repaid by me since 2006.

44 The wife's version is quite different. She says as follows:

12. ... I wish to say that upon our marriage, we lived and cohabited first at ... Jalan Bahagia ... Singapore ("the HDB flat") and thereafter at the matrimonial home [in Sembawang]. The Defendant...volunteered to include me as joint owner of the HDB flat upon our marriage; accordingly contrary to the Defendant's claim, I did not insist on the inclusion of my name as joint owner of the HDB flat. Copies of the Transfer and the title search on the HDB flat exhibited at pages 40 to 47 of this Affidavit directly contradicts [sic] the Defendant's claim that the HDB flat was bought in the joint names of his mother and himself. The title search in fact shows that the HDB flat was purchased by the Defendant in his sole name sometime in or about April 1994 with the transfer to his sole name being registered on 21 June 1995. Following our marriage on 9 April 1996, the Defendant voluntarily and of his own free will on 4 June 1997 transferred the HDB flat in his sole name to our joint names as joint tenants, the transfer to me being by way of gift.

13. The aforesaid title search further shows that the HDB flat was sold sometime at the end of 1997 or the beginning of 1998. Further ... the Defendant allude to the fact that the proceed [sic] from the sale of the HDB flat was utilised towards payment of 20% of the purchase price for [the Serangoon property]. This cannot be true bearing in mind that the HDB flat was sold way back at the end of 1997 or the beginning of 1998 whereas [the Serangoon property] was purchased some 5 or 6 years later in 2003 ...

45 On every contentious point in these two accounts of the relevant events, the wife's account is amply supported by contemporaneous and independent documentary evidence while the husband's account is based solely on his word. Indeed, the husband's account of these events is so devoid of evidential support and is so diametrically inconsistent with the contemporaneous and independent documentary evidence produced by the wife that I am driven to the conclusion that the husband is either a self-deluded fantasist or an unabashed liar.

46 I therefore have no hesitation in accepting the wife's account in relation to Jalan Bahagia. The consequences are twofold. First, I find that the husband voluntarily made a gift to the wife of an equal interest in Jalan Bahagia before it was sold. Indeed, his intention to make a gift to her is expressly recorded in the endorsement of the transfer from his sole name to their joint names on the land register. [\[note: 56\]](#) Second, I find that the wife's half-interest in Jalan Bahagia translates into a direct contribution by the wife towards the acquisition of the Sembawang property which is equal to the husband's direct contribution.

Sembawang property

47 The Sembawang property was purchased in 1997 for $1.68m. [\[note: 57\]](#) It was purchased with three co-owners holding the property as tenants in common in equal shares. [\[note: 58\]](#) The three co-owners were the wife, the husband and the husband's mother. The property was sold in June 2011 for $2.3m by agreement of the three co-owners in order to facilitate its division as a matrimonial asset, after accounting for the husband's mother's interest in it.

48 It is not disputed that the husband's mother paid $450,000 towards the purchase price of the Sembawang property and the stamp duty payable upon the transfer. The remaining $1.23m of the purchase price was financed by OCBC in three parts: [\[note: 59\]](#) (i) a bridging loan of $200,000; (ii) a housing loan of $730,000; and (iii) an overdraft facility of $300,000.

49 The bridging loan of $200,000 was in due course discharged using the proceeds of sale of Jalan Bahagia. The husband submits that this sum of $200,000 should be attributed entirely to him as he was the sole owner of Jalan Bahagia. [\[note: 60\]](#) As I have found, that is not the true position: the husband made a gift to the wife of a half-interest in Jalan Bahagia shortly before it was sold. I therefore attribute this $200,000 direct contribution to the acquisition of the Sembawang property equally to the husband and the wife.

50 The husband's and the wife's remaining direct contributions to the acquisition of the Sembawang property came through monthly deductions from their respective CPF accounts to service the housing loan from OCBC. In all, $300,082.40 was deducted from the husband's CPF account whereas $307,413.03 [\[note: 61\]](#) was deducted from the wife's CPF account. The cash component of each month's instalment was paid out of funds provided by the husband's mother. [\[note: 62\]](#) Her evidence is that from 1997 to 2011, she paid $280,413.01 to the husband which he used for this purpose. [\[note: 63\]](#)

51 When the Sembawang property was sold in 2011, the net proceeds of sale amounted to $928,008.36. [\[note: 64\]](#) The three co-owners agreed that the husband's mother's share of the net proceeds of sale should be fixed at $621,703.88 [\[note: 65\]](#) and should be released to her. Separately, the husband and the wife agreed that the sum remaining after releasing the agreed share to the husband's mother should be held by Mallal & Namazie as stakeholders and be divided as a matrimonial asset in these proceedings. [\[note: 66\]](#)

52 The sum released to the husband's mother as her share of the Sembawang property must be taken to represent the entirety of her interest in that property arising not only from the $450,000 which she paid at the time of acquisition but also from her contribution towards the stamp duty and the sums she furnished to the husband to pay the cash portion of the monthly instalments. The only direct contributions to the acquisition of the Sembawang property which remain to be accounted for out of the sum held by Mallal & Namazie are therefore the direct contributions made by each spouse, all of which came by way of deduction from each spouse's CPF account.

53 The stakeholding sum held by Mallal & Namazie was further reduced by a deduction of $13,118.91. That sum was a deduction which Mallal & Namazie was compelled to make from the net proceeds of sale and to pay over to the Comptroller of Income Tax pursuant to s 57(5A) of the Income Tax Act [\[note: 67\]](#) in order to discharge the husband's unpaid liability for income tax.

54 The result is that the entirety of the spouses' joint interest in the Sembawang property is now represented by the stakeholding sum of $298,491.94 [\[note: 68\]](#) with Mallal & Namazie. I have found that the husband has paid $400,082.40 towards the Sembawang property whereas the wife has paid $407,413.03 (see [49] and [50] above). [\[note: 69\]](#) Taking the sum of those two figures as the denominator, the husband's and the wife's direct contributions to this property are therefore 49.55% and 50.45% respectively.

Serangoon property

55 The spouses own the Serangoon property as joint tenants on a 99-year lease which commenced on 28 June 1951 and expires on 27 June 2050. [\[note: 70\]](#) The husband and wife conducted their businesses from these premises. From 2011, after the Sembawang property was sold, the husband resided in the Serangoon property. This property is by now unencumbered by a mortgage. [\[note: 71\]](#)

56 The husband claims that he paid entirely for the Serangoon property. He says: [\[note: 72\]](#)

As regards [the Serangoon property], although it was purchased in joint names, it was financed entirely by me and the loan with Hong Leong Finance has been fully settled since 2006, not 2007 as alleged. The mortgage payments were paid by me by debiting my personal bank account. I am in the process of procuring the bank statements to show the same and will disclose the same in due course.

57 Once again, the wife's account is quite different. She says this: [\[note: 73\]](#)

It is also untrue that [the Serangoon property] was paid for by the Defendant. The truth as the Defendant well knew was that $450,000 being the purchase price of [the Serangoon property] was paid as follows:-

- Cash $90,000;
- Balance $360,000 was from Hong Leong Finance Ltd's mortgage loan.

The cash as well as the monthly mortgage was paid for by the Defendant and I [sic] equally notwithstanding that in the mortgage document, the Borrower was the Defendant and the Mortgagors were the Defendant and I [sic] ...

The mortgage on [the Serangoon property] was redeemed in May 2007 where the Defendant issued a company's ([Q] Pte Ltd where as would be recalled, I owned and still own 50% of the share capital) DBS cheque for $320,088.98 being the redemption sum. The aforesaid cheque was returned by Hong Leong Finance Ltd which requested that a personal and not company's cheque be issued for the said redemption. The Defendant subsequently issued his UOB cheque for the said sum which I verily believe was through monies credited by [Q] Pte Ltd via [Q] Pte Ltd's DBS cheque... dated 8 May 2007 for the said sum of $320,088.98. ...

58 As in the case of Jalan Bahagia and the Sembawang property, the wife's account on the Serangoon property is supported by particulars and by contemporaneous and independent documentary evidence. The husband's account, yet again, is not. I therefore again have no hesitation in accepting the wife's account. I find that the parties contributed equally to the acquisition of the Serangoon property and equally to servicing the loan taken out to finance its acquisition. [\[note: 74\]](#)

59 I therefore hold that each spouse made a direct contribution of 50% to the acquisition of the Serangoon property.

Conclusion on direct contributions

60 The result is that the wife's direct contribution to the total pool of matrimonial assets stands at

53.51% and the husband's direct contributions stands at 46.49%. I have arrived at those percentages in this way:

Wife's direct contributions	Percentage attributed	Value
Assets in own name	100%	$767,805.94
Share of the Serangoon property	50.00%	$500,000.00
Share of the Sembawang property	50.45%	$150,600.86
Total	53.51%	$1,418,406.80

Husband's direct contributions	Percentage attributed	Value
Assets in own name	100%	$584,449.66
Share of the Serangoon property	50.00%	$500,000.00
Share of the Sembawang property	49.55%	$147,891.08
Total	46.49%	$1,232,343.74

Indirect contributions

61 Section 112(2)(d) of the Women's Charter provides that one of the circumstances of the case which a court has a duty to have regard to in arriving at a just and equitable division of matrimonial assets is "the extent of the contributions made by each party to the welfare of the family, including looking after the home or caring for the family". This provision covers both non-financial contributions to the welfare of the family as well as indirect financial contributions to the welfare of the family, ie financial contributions to the family's welfare which cannot be attributed to a tangible matrimonial asset.

62 Having considered all of the evidence and the submissions, and applying broad strokes, I find that the wife has made contributions to the welfare of the family which are equivalent to double those of the husband's contributions, ie in a 2:1 ratio in her favour. I have arrived at this finding for the following reasons.

The wife's indirect contributions

63 The wife has been the primary caregiver of the triplets since their birth. [\[note: 75\]](#) Her evidence is that she devoted all of her free time and effort to raising the triplets, focusing on their physical, emotional and academic needs and well-being. [\[note: 76\]](#) The husband attempts to minimise her efforts by pointing out that the wife returned to work soon after giving birth and left the care of the triplets to his mother and the parties' maids. [\[note: 77\]](#) It is true: (i) that the wife returned to work after two months' maternity leave; (ii) that the couple had two maids until the triplets turned five years of age; and (iii) that the husband's mother lived with them in the matrimonial home and assisted in supervising the maids and in childcare. [\[note: 78\]](#) But I accept the wife's evidence that she returned to work for the overall economic benefit of the family and that, after she returned to work, any time which she did not spend on the family business, she spent on looking after the triplets. [\[note: 79\]](#) Further, on the facts of this case, I allocate the time which the husband's mother spent on childcare to compensate for the husband's failure to contribute to childcare and not to reduce the wife's contribution to childcare.

64 I also attach importance to the fact that the triplets were born through in vitro fertilisation. Assisted reproduction techniques such as in vitro fertilisation typically exact a high toll on the mother, physically, emotionally and psychologically. That was the case here. The wife had to undergo many stressful and painful procedures, several unsuccessful attempts and much anxiety in trying to conceive. [\[note: 80\]](#) I also take into account the additional physical and psychological stress arising from a multiple pregnancy. All of this has the effect of increasing the wife's indirect contributions as compared to the husband's.

The husband's indirect contributions

(i) Financial indirect contribution

65 The husband's evidence is that he provided amply for the financial needs of the family. [\[note: 81\]](#) Although the wife disputes this, she does so only in relation to the period after she left the matrimonial home with the triplets in January 2010. [\[note: 82\]](#) For the period from the birth of the triplets in 2003 until she left the matrimonial home, it is the wife's own evidence that the husband provided $14,000 every month to maintain the wife and the triplets. [\[note: 83\]](#) That is, by any measure, a generous sum, sufficient to cater for all of the triplets' material needs.

66 In assessing the husband's indirect contributions, I therefore give him full credit for his substantial indirect financial contribution. Unfortunately, this is virtually the husband's only indirect contribution to the welfare of the family.

(ii) Lack of emotional support for wife and children

67 Although the wife's statement of particulars was amended by agreement, [\[note: 84\]](#) the uncontested particulars of the husband's unreasonable behaviour which remain after amendment are serious. These uncontested particulars include the following: [\[note: 85\]](#)

- (a) Throughout the marriage, the husband displayed a foul temper against the wife and the triplets;
- (b) The husband treated the wife since 2004 with complete lack of affection and without any consideration for her feelings or emotional well-being;
- (c) The husband engaged in the behaviour set out at [6] and [9] above; and
- (d) The husband committed a battery on the wife in the circumstances set out at [12]–[14] above.

(iii) Decision to cut off financial support from January 2010

68 Further, the husband cut off all maintenance for the wife and triplets after the wife left the matrimonial home with the triplets. [\[note: 86\]](#) He cancelled the wife's supplementary credit cards. [\[note: 87\]](#)

[87\]](#) He did all this even though he remained under a legal obligation to maintain the wife and triplets and even though his financial position at that time, in January 2010, had not yet undergone any material change. I can only presume that the husband acted out of vindictiveness.

(iv) Domineering nature

69 The husband was, by all accounts, a domineering husband. I rely for this finding on his own explanation of his battery on the wife set out at [14] above. That extract, set in the husband's own words, shows an utter lack of self-awareness and of remorse for his actions. The wife's evidence is that this was his typical of attitude throughout the marriage. As she says: [\[note: 88\]](#)

The Defendant was the dominant party in respect of both the marriage and our businesses. Further, in respect of the business, although we were supposed to be partners, the Defendant by his words and conduct always treated me as a subordinate or staff much to my distress – the Defendant having said to me on more than once that there can only be one leader, referring to himself, and that I must give him complete or 100% support, no question asked otherwise I am not a supportive wife. To please the Defendant and so as not to jeopardise the marriage, I invariably gave in to the Defendant.

(v) Homosexuality

70 I do not count the husband's sexual orientation in itself against him in assessing his indirect contributions to the welfare of the family. But there are, on the facts of this case, aspects of how the husband has dealt with his homosexuality which I find to have detracted significantly from the welfare of the family.

71 First, the husband dishonestly concealed his sexual orientation from the wife. I reject his evidence that he disclosed it to her before their marriage. [\[note: 89\]](#) The wife denies this allegation. Her evidence is that she became aware of his sexual orientation for the first time after she saw the private investigators' reports in 2009. [\[note: 90\]](#)

72 I accept the wife's evidence. It is consistent with the husband's own conduct in the various litigation that the parties have been involved in. In the personal protection proceedings commenced by the wife in 2010, the husband deposed on oath that his homosexual lover was just a friend. Further, the first time that the husband alleged that the wife knew of his homosexuality before the marriage was in these proceedings, and even then only at a late stage, on 27 March 2012. He had never asserted such knowledge on the part of the wife during the earlier personal protection proceedings or during the guardianship proceedings. In the latter proceedings, that knowledge would have been a material fact. [\[note: 91\]](#) Once again, I am unimpressed by the husband's capacity for truth-telling.

73 Second, the wife has adduced evidence that the husband leads a particularly dissolute and reckless lifestyle. [\[note: 92\]](#) The wife has put in evidence a profile posted by the husband on a website known as "Manjam". Manjam appears to be a social media platform catering to homosexuals. The husband's profile on Manjam includes a slide show of photographs of himself clad only in his underwear accompanied by text in lurid terms soliciting other male homosexuals for short-term sexual trysts.

74 Significantly, the husband is dishonest in the personal profile he has posted on this website. He gives his age dishonestly as 35 when he is in fact almost ten years older. [\[note: 93\]](#) He says dishonestly that he has no children when in fact he is the father of triplets. Most importantly, he says dishonestly that he is HIV negative when he is in fact HIV positive. The dishonesty displayed by the husband in this profile coupled with his dishonesty in the affidavits he has filed in these proceedings suggests a pattern of dishonest conduct. This is yet another reason I have for doubting the veracity of the husband's evidence and for preferring the wife's evidence on all contentious matters.

75 Although the husband posted this profile on Manjam in 2012, there is every reason to believe that this sort of conduct underlay the change in his behaviour observed by the wife during the marriage and which led to the divorce.

76 Third, the husband is involved with a homosexual partner who also leads a particularly reckless and dissolute lifestyle. The wife has placed before me evidence [\[note: 94\]](#) that the partner was found in September 2009 unconscious under the bed of his then homosexual lover, whose dead body was in the bed. The partner has also admitted to using drugs such as Ecstasy and ketamine.

77 Fourth, the husband is HIV positive. Again, I do not hold that fact against him in itself. Being HIV positive is today more in the nature of a medical condition to be managed than the death sentence which it once was. It is the circumstances in which the husband became HIV positive which I take into account. It is the case that men who have sex with men can drastically reduce their risk of acquiring HIV by the consistent exercise of personal responsibility in their liaisons. The fact that the husband is now HIV positive coupled with the evidence of his solicitation of sexual partners suggests to me that his HIV status has arisen from promiscuous sexual behaviour, a reckless failure to exercise personal responsibility or both. This is all the more reckless given that he apparently lies to his homosexual partners about his HIV positive status. I also bear in mind that the husband did not disclose his HIV positive status to the wife until after she confronted him about his behaviour in 2009. There is therefore every possibility that the husband exposed the wife to a real risk of herself acquiring the virus during unprotected heterosexual sex with the husband.

Conclusion on indirect contributions

78 Bearing all of the above in mind, in my view the wife has made double the indirect contributions to the welfare of the family that the husband has made. I therefore apportion the indirect contributions at 66.67% to the wife and 33.33% to the husband. If anything, I consider that assessment overly generous to the husband.

Just and equitable proportion of matrimonial assets

79 I have found that the husband has made direct contributions to the matrimonial assets of 46.49% and indirect contributions to the welfare of the family of 33.33%. I have also found that the wife has made direct contributions to the matrimonial assets of 53.51% and indirect contributions to the welfare of the family of 66.67%. Averaging the two percentages for each spouse and rounding off the result to the nearest whole percentage point, I conclude that a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets would be to award the wife 60% of the matrimonial assets and to award the husband 40%. The result in absolute terms is that, out of a pool of matrimonial assets worth $2,650,747.54, the wife is entitled to $1,590,448.52 and the husband to $1,060,299.02.

80 Under ANJ's structured approach, I do not consider that any further adjustment needs to be made to those figures in the fourth step in order to account for the remaining factors under s 112 of the Women's Charter. Stepping back and looking at the matter with a degree of perspective, a division of 60% to the wife and 40% to the husband appears to me to be broadly fair bearing in mind that this was a 15 year marriage and that I make separate provision for the needs of the triplets. It is true that the husband has been residing rent-free in matrimonial property – first in the Sembawang property and then in the Serangoon property – since the wife left the matrimonial home in January 2010 whereas the wife has been paying rent from her own resources throughout that period. However, it appears to me that adjusting the wife’s percentage upwards would be somewhat unfair to the husband, particularly bearing in mind that he must be left with sufficient funds to house himself and that his share is reduced further by the provision I make for lump sum maintenance for the triplets.

Deductions proposed by each party

81 Each party asks me to make certain deductions from the other party’s share of the matrimonial assets. I consider these deductions in turn.

The wife’s proposed deductions

82 The wife points out that the net proceeds of the sale of the Sembawang property account not only for the sum of $414,539.16 paid to OCBC to redeem the mortgage of the property (including all accrued interest and late charges) but for the sum of $152,742.00 [\[note: 95\]](#) due to OCBC on the overdraft account secured against the property. This overdraft indebtedness to OCBC was incurred by the husband in December 2010. This was after the marriage had broken down. The wife had by then left the matrimonial home and had commenced and concluded both the personal protection proceedings and the guardianship proceedings. The withdrawal took place without the knowledge or consent of the wife. [\[note: 96\]](#)

83 Despite all that, I decline to make any adjustment for this sum. Although this withdrawal took place after the marriage had broken down, it took place before the wife commenced divorce proceedings and before the date of interlocutory judgment. It is that date which I use as the cut-off date to ascertain the pool of matrimonial assets. There is no reason, therefore, not to treat this overdraft liability as a matrimonial liability. In addition, adding back the husband’s 40% share of this liability would further reduce the sum awarded to him, an outcome which I do not consider would be fair to him.

84 Second, the wife submits that she should not bear any part of the husband’s income tax liability of $13,118.91 which was deducted from the net proceeds of sale of the Sembawang property. I do not accept this submission either. To the extent that the income on which this income tax was levied is a matrimonial asset, the tax on that income is also a matrimonial liability. I see no reason again to attribute this debt entirely to the husband.

85 Finally, the wife draws my attention to the sum of $29,500 remaining due from the husband to the wife arising from the costs orders in the personal protection proceedings, in the custody proceedings and in these proceedings. This is an undisputed and indisputable debt. In my view, it is just and equitable that a sum of $29,500 should be deducted from the husband’s share and added to the wife’s share, thereby extinguishing the husband’s liability to the wife for these costs.

The husband’s proposed deduction

86 The husband asks that I require the wife to bring into account the sum of $95,527.25 which the wife withdrew from the account of [Q] Pte Ltd in February 2010. [\[note: 97\]](#) The wife’s position is that this was a part-payment to herself of unpaid salary amounting to $117,600 which was due to her from the couple’s various businesses. Once again, the wife is able to produce independent, contemporaneous documentary evidence to support her assertion. [\[note: 98\]](#) This evidence comprises internal accounting documents from [P], [Q] Pte Ltd and the couple's spa business which she was able to obtain from a sympathetic employee. [\[note: 99\]](#) These documents confirm the wife's evidence about the undrawn salary which had accrued due to her. I therefore accept her evidence and reject the husband's submission. It also appears to me that this sum is accounted for by the share capital of [R] Pte Ltd, also formed in February 2010. I have treated the wife's interest in [R] Pte Ltd as a matrimonial asset. I therefore decline to make any deduction from the wife's share of the matrimonial assets to account for this amount.

Conclusion on division of matrimonial assets

87 The result of considering these deductions is that the wife's share of the matrimonial assets ought to be enhanced by a further $29,500, with a corresponding reduction in the husband's share. Following this adjustment, the wife's share of the matrimonial assets in absolute terms is $1,619,948.52 and the husband's is $1,030,799.02.

88 Before considering how that division ought to be effected, I turn to consider the issue of maintenance.

Maintenance

89 The wife's primary position on maintenance is that lump sum maintenance for herself and the triplets is incorporated in her submission on the division of the matrimonial assets set out at [31] above. Alternatively, if I am not minded to grant lump sum maintenance for the wife and the triplets, the wife asks for maintenance for herself in the sum of $7,000 a month and maintenance for the triplets in the total sum of $7,094 a month. [\[note: 100\]](#)

Maintenance for the wife

90 The wife estimates her own monthly expenses at $13,826.42 per month. [\[note: 101\]](#) Almost one-third of this sum comprises a lump sum of $4,000 per month sought for "personal maintenance per month – health, medical, clothing, shoes, cosmetics, facial, eating, family outings, insurance in the process of being arranged, [handphone] bills, etc". A further $2,800 per month is sought for the wife's rent. The wife also lists her aged mother as a financial dependent to the extent of $800 per month. [\[note: 102\]](#)

91 The list of factors I am obliged to have regard to in determining the amount of maintenance to be paid by the husband to the wife are set out in s 114(1) of the Women's Charter. I consider all of these factors in the round.

92 The wife is 49 years old. She has been employed since 1 March 2010 by her own company, [R] Pte Ltd. Her starting salary was $3,500 per month with a fixed transportation allowance of $1,000 per month. [\[note: 103\]](#) That was increased with effect from 2011 to $4,000 per month plus the fixed transport allowance of $1,000 per month. [\[note: 104\]](#) Her income tax notices of assessment show that she earned $68,022 in 2007, $116,001.40 in 2008 and $102,601 in 2009. [\[note: 105\]](#)

93 The husband is 48 years old. He is unemployed. [\[note: 106\]](#) His income tax notices of assessment show that he earned $67,024 in 2005, had no income in 2008, earned $151,830 in 2009 and had no income in 2010. [\[note: 107\]](#) As I have mentioned, he is an undischarged bankrupt.

94 The marriage is a long one, lasting 15 years. As I have found, the wife made twice the contributions to the welfare of the family that the husband did.

95 It appears to me that it is not appropriate in all the circumstances of the case to order the husband to pay maintenance to the wife. I say that for two reasons.

96 First, the husband has no capacity to pay maintenance. He is unemployed and an undischarged bankrupt. It is the wife's submission that his status both as unemployed and as a bankrupt is a ploy by him to evade his obligations to his wife and family upon divorce. I have no basis on which to find that that is true.

97 Second, the wife has shown herself to be a resourceful businesswoman, capable of achieving economic independence both during the marriage and after it. Her need for maintenance is correspondingly reduced. I bear in mind also that although her current income appears modest, she is in fact not just an employee of [R] Pte Ltd but a 99% owner of it as well. She is therefore entitled to receive not just a salary from [R] Pte Ltd as its employee but also virtually all of its profits as its proprietor. It therefore appears to me that the wife is capable, subject to receiving maintenance for the triplets, of maintaining after the divorce the same standard of living enjoyed by the family during the marriage.

98 However, in case the circumstances of either spouse or of both spouses change to warrant a reconsideration of the issue of maintenance, I grant the wife liberty to apply for maintenance.

99 In declining to award the wife substantive maintenance for herself at this stage, I express no view on the reasonableness or otherwise of the components of her monthly expenses on which she bases her claim for monthly maintenance of $7,000 per month. That will have to be determined separately if and when it arises.

Maintenance for the triplets

100 The wife seeks maintenance of $7,094 per month for the triplets. Rounded off, this sum amounts to an average of $2,365 per child. The breakdown provided by the wife for each child shows nothing exceptional. She has made provision for typical and reasonable sums for the triplets' clothing, medical costs, school fees, tuition and related expenses, extra-curricular activities and transportation. I therefore find that $7,094 per month is a reasonable amount for the maintenance of the triplets.

101 The triplets are approximately 11½ years of age. They will achieve majority in another 9½ years. The cost of maintaining them until they reach majority, on the figures put forward by the wife, will be $808,716.

102 That sum of $808,716 is not the correct measure of the husband's liability for maintenance. First, under s 68 of the Women's Charter, the obligation to maintain the triplets is an obligation of both parents. The husband and wife are both of equal earning capacity. I therefore hold that they should each bear equally the cost of maintaining the triplets until they attain majority. The husband's 50% share of the triplets' maintenance is $404,358.

103 Second, the liability of the husband to pay lump sum maintenance for the triplets must be discounted to account for the time value of money. The wife will receive the maintenance as a lump sum now but will spend it only at the rate of $3,547 per month over the coming 9½ years. I consider that an appropriate discount rate to apply would be 4.25% per annum, representing a realistically achievable rate of return in the current investment environment. That annual discount rate over 9½ years is equivalent to a flat discount of 19%. I therefore discount the sum of $404,358 by 19% to account for the time value of money.

104 The result is that I hold that the husband shall pay lump sum maintenance to the wife for the triplets in the sum of $327,529.98.

Mode of payment

105 I summarise my holdings so far. I have held that the wife is entitled to receive $1,619,948.52 as her share of the matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter and in extinction of the husband's existing liability to her for unpaid legal costs. I have further held that the wife should receive the sum of $327,529.98 as lump sum maintenance for the triplets. The total sum payable to the wife is therefore $1,947,478.50.

106 That sum of $1,947,478.50 shall be paid to the wife as follows:

(a) Assets in her own name	$767,805.94
(b) 60% of the sum held by Mallal & Namazie	$179,095.16
(c) Entire interest in the Serangoon property	$1,000,000
Total	$1,946,901.10

107 The transfer of 60% of the sum held by Mallal & Namazie awards the wife not only her 49.55% interest in that sum but an additional 10.45% of that sum which is to be deducted from the husband's 50.45% interest in that sum. That brings their respective percentages to 60% and 40% in that asset. Although the resulting total is $577.40 short of $1,947,478.50, that is a variance of only 0.03%. It is de minimis and can be ignored.

The effect of bankruptcy

108 Having arrived at a just and equitable division of the matrimonial property, I now consider the effect of the husband's bankruptcy. I first set out again the chronology of relevant events. The wife commenced these proceedings on 27 January 2011. She secured interim judgment on 25 October 2011. A creditor of the husband presented its bankruptcy application against him on 4 April 2012. The husband was adjudged bankrupt on 29 November 2012.

109 Two consequences followed upon the husband being adjudged bankrupt. First, under s 76(1)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act, a statutory moratorium came into force preventing all of the husband's creditors from pursuing any remedy, action or proceedings against him in respect of any debt provable in his bankruptcy. Second, under s 76(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act (Cap 20, 2009 Rev Ed) ("Bankruptcy Act"), the husband's property vested in the Official Assignee immediately and became divisible amongst his creditors, subject only to the exceptions set out in s 78(2) of the Bankruptcy Act. The only assets of the husband which fall within s 78(2) are the credit balances in his CPF account.

110 The statutory moratorium under s 76(1)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act is no obstacle to these divorce proceedings continuing against the husband or to my dividing the matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter. A wife pursuing divorce proceedings against a husband and seeking a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter is outside s 76(1)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act. She is not a creditor of the husband in any sense of the word and is not seeking to pursue any remedy, action or proceeding against the husband in respect of any debt provable in the husband's bankruptcy. In JA v JB [2005] SGDC 104 ("JA v JB"), it was held that the court may hear and determine a wife's application to divide the parties' matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter and award maintenance for her and the children of the marriage notwithstanding the husband's bankruptcy because that application, not being in respect of a debt provable in bankruptcy, is outside the prohibition in s 76(1)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act. I accept that proposition as correct.

111 JA v JB does not, however, consider the interaction between the statutory vesting of the bankrupt's property in the Official Assignee under s 76(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act, and the court's power to divide matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter. This interaction is of some importance. A bankruptcy can be used tactically to obstruct or delay the court exercising its jurisdiction under s 112. Likewise, divorce proceedings can be brought collusively to put the assets of an insolvent or near insolvent spouse beyond the reach of his creditors through a transfer of property sought and made under s 112 of the Women's Charter.

112 Where a spouse is adjudged bankrupt before the matrimonial assets can be divided under s 112 of the Women's Charter, the bankruptcy creates a fundamental difficulty. The vesting of the bankrupt spouse's assets in the Official Assignee under s 76(1)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act prevents a court which is exercising matrimonial jurisdiction from making any order under s 112 which affects the vested assets. That is the case for two reasons.

113 First, s 112 is predicated on title to the matrimonial assets which are to be divided being vested in the spouses. That is no longer the case when a spouse has been adjudicated bankrupt. Subject only to the provisions of s 78(2) of the Bankruptcy Act, the simple position is that the bankrupt spouse no longer owns any matrimonial assets: his interest in those assets is vested in the Official Assignee. That includes the bankrupt spouse's title to jointly-held matrimonial assets. There is nothing in s 112 which allows the court in its matrimonial jurisdiction to disregard this statutory divesting of the bankrupt spouse's assets or to engineer a re-vesting of those assets in the bankrupt spouse so that they become available for division under s 112. The general power to set aside a disposition by a husband under s 132 of the Women's Charter applies only to a disposition by the husband which is voluntary, and not to the disposition which takes place by operation of law upon a bankruptcy order being made, even if the husband commenced the bankruptcy proceedings himself: see Woodley v Woodley (No. 2) [1993] 2 FLR 477.

114 The second reason that a bankruptcy order prevents the court from dividing matrimonial assets under s 112 of the Women's Charter is that the court's power under that section permits the court to divide matrimonial assets and order the transfer of matrimonial assets only as between the parties to the marriage. The Official Assignee, quite obviously, is not a party to the marriage. The court therefore has no power, under s 112, to affect the Official Assignee's title to the assets vested in him by operation of law under s 76(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act or to order the Official Assignee to transfer or sell any of those assets: In Re Holliday [1981] 1 Ch 405 at 421D per Goff LJ.

115 The court's powers under s 112 of the Women's Charter can be exercised against a bankruptcy spouse only in respect of those of his assets which have not vested in the Official Assignee because they are excluded from the vesting under s 76(1)(a) by s 78(2) of the Bankruptcy Act. These assets include those specifically enumerated in s 78(2) of the Bankruptcy Act as well as those protected by other written law. Most notable in the latter category is HDB property, which is protected by s 51(5) of the Housing and Development Act (Cap 129, 2004 Rev Ed), and CPF money, which is protected by

116 With respect to assets which have vested in the Official Assignee, the most that a court can do under s 112 of the Women's Charter is to take the value of those divested assets into account by notionally adding them back to the pool of matrimonial assets and dividing the enlarged pool in accordance with s 112, but without encroaching on the assets vested in the Official Assignee. That, of course, is no solution where the non-bankrupt spouse lays claim to some or all of the matrimonial assets now vested in the OA or where the bankrupt spouse claims that some of the debts provable in his bankruptcy are matrimonial debts.

117 A non-bankrupt spouse who seeks a transfer of assets which have vested in the Official Assignee under s 76(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act must first effect a re-vesting of those assets in the bankrupt spouse. Section 132 of the Women's Charter is unavailable to effect this re-vesting (see [113] above). Further, although the bankruptcy court has a general discretion to rescind its orders, including bankruptcy orders, under s 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, that discretion is to be exercised with caution and only in exceptional circumstances: see Fitch v Fitch [1996] 1 WLR 242 and Papanicola v Humphreys [2005] 2 All ER 418.

118 The only practicable way for the non-bankrupt spouse to achieve that re-vesting is by securing the annulment of the bankruptcy order. There are two ways in which she can secure that annulment. First, she can apply for an annulment of the bankruptcy under s 123(1)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act on the grounds that the bankruptcy order ought not to have been made, eg by showing that the bankrupt spouse was not in fact insolvent at that time: see Whig v Whig [2008] 1 FLR 453 and Paulin v Paulin [2010] 1 WLR 1057. Second, the non-bankrupt spouse can take it upon herself to pay off all of the bankrupt spouse's debts and thereafter seek an annulment of the bankruptcy order either by the court under s 123(1)(b) of the Bankruptcy Act or by certificate of the Official Assignee under s 123A(1) Bankruptcy Act. Both of these courses of action, unfortunately, require significant financial risk and expenditure, whether in costs or in repayments, by the non-bankrupt spouse.

119 If the non-bankrupt spouse is unable or unwilling to secure a re-vesting of the bankrupt's spouse's property in him through either of these approaches, she has no alternative but to defer the resolution of the ancillary matters until the bankruptcy order is annulled either upon the application of the bankrupt spouse or by or upon the application of the OA. So long as the bankruptcy order remains in effect, only the assets excluded from the operation of the vesting order by s 78(2) of the Bankruptcy Act remain vested in the bankrupt spouse and available for division under s 112 of the Women's Charter.

120 In this case, I have held that a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets requires the husband to transfer to the wife his entire interest in the Serangoon property and 10.45% of the stakeholding sum with Mallal & Namazie out of his 50.45% share of that sum. But both these assets of the husband vested in the Official Assignee when the husband was made bankrupt. The Official Assignee is beyond the reach of any order I can make under s 112 of the Women's Charter. The husband's bankruptcy would therefore ordinarily have made it impossible for me to order the transfer necessary to bring about the division of the matrimonial assets which I have found to be just and equitable.

121 In those circumstances, I would ordinarily have adjourned these ancillary proceedings to permit the wife to consider whether she wished to take the necessary steps to have the husband's bankruptcy annulled under either limb of s 123 of the Bankruptcy Act.

122 This case is not, however, the ordinary case. At my request, a representative of the Official Assignee's office attended the hearing of this matter to assist the court. I considered it important to hear from the Official Assignee as the voice of the husband's creditors. Once a spouse has been made bankrupt, third party interests intrude on the division of matrimonial assets. Every dollar of matrimonial assets transferred away from the bankrupt spouse under s 112 of the Women's Charter is one fewer dollar available to pay the bankrupt spouse's creditors. There is no reason in principle why the creditors' interests should inevitably and in every case be subordinated to the non-bankrupt spouse's interest. Indeed, the Bankruptcy Act prioritises the rights of creditors over the rights of a non-bankrupt spouse on at least two occasions: see s 53 and s 55 of the Women's Charter. There is also English authority that in the absence of exceptional circumstances, creditors' rights ought ordinarily to prevail over the non-bankrupt spouse's rights: In Re Citro (Domenico) (A Bankrupt) [1991] Ch 142 at 157A. In those circumstances, it is important that all three sets of competing interests be actively represented before the matrimonial court, even if there is no basis to suspect collusion between husband and wife.

123 I ascertained from the Official Assignee that the debts proved in the husband's bankruptcy amount to $123,391.44. That is very close to the value of the 40% share which I have found the husband is entitled to out of the net proceeds of sale of the Sembawang property. That is why this is not the ordinary case.

124 It would not ordinarily be appropriate for a court hearing ancillary proceedings in its matrimonial jurisdiction to make orders which have the potential to affect the rights of creditors in an ongoing bankruptcy. But where the share of the matrimonial assets which a court exercising matrimonial jurisdiction has determined it is just and equitable for the bankrupt spouse to receive suffices to repay all of his creditors in full, as in the present case, the creditors' interests recede from view: see Hellyer v Hellyer [1996] 2 FLR 579. I therefore consider it just and convenient to exercise my power under s 112 to effect a just and equitable division of the matrimonial assets, but to do so, in the unusual circumstances of this case, subject to a condition precedent which I attach pursuant to my powers under s 112(5)(e) and s 112(8) of the Women's Charter. That condition precedent is the annulment of the husband's bankruptcy.

125 I have therefore ordered as follows:

- (a) Mallal & Namazie shall release to the Official Assignee from the stakeholding sum which they hold an amount sufficient to secure the annulment of the husband's bankruptcy by certificate of the Official Assignee under s 123A of the Bankruptcy Act;
- (b) Subject to the bankruptcy of the husband being annulled under s 123A, and immediately thereupon without need for further order, the following ancillary orders shall take effect:
 - (i) The husband shall deliver to the wife vacant possession of the Serangoon property within two months of the annulment.
 - (ii) The husband shall transfer to the wife the entirety of his right, title and interest in the Serangoon property.
 - (iii) Mallal & Namazie shall release to the wife the balance of the stakeholding money which they hold.
 - (iv) The wife shall have no further claim against the husband for any unpaid costs orders in these or any other proceedings.

(v) Each party shall retain the assets in his or her sole name.

(vi) The wife shall transfer to the husband all the shares registered in her name in [Q] Pte Ltd and renounce any interest, legal or beneficial, therein.

These steps, once taken, will discharge entirely the husband's obligations towards the wife arising from my division of the spouse's matrimonial assets. I have given the parties and the Official Assignee liberty to apply in relation to matters arising from the implementation of this order or arising from unforeseen contingencies.

126 I now turn to consider the issue of custody of the triplets.

Custody and access

127 As I have mentioned, the wife has had sole custody, care and control of the triplets since 2010, with the husband having supervised access to the triplets for two hours every Saturday at the Woodlands Civic Centre, together with reasonable telephone access. The wife asks that those orders continue without variation.

128 The husband asks that I order joint custody of the triplets with care and control to the wife and liberal access to the husband. He asks for access to the triplets: (i) from 10.00 am to 8.00 pm on alternate Saturdays; (ii) overnight from 10.00 am on Saturday to 6.00 pm on Sunday on alternate weekends; (iii) from 10.00 am to 6.00 pm on alternate public holidays; (iv) half of the school holidays; (v) for the triplets' birthdays in alternate years, if he does not otherwise have access on that day; (vi) for his own birthday; and (vii) over the Lunar New Year holiday period every year, to be divided between himself and the wife. [\[note: 108\]](#)

129 It being common ground that the wife is to have care and control of the triplets, the only issues I have to decide are custody of and access to them.

Custody

130 As the Court of Appeal pointed out in CX v CY (minor: custody and access) [2005] 3 SLR(R) 690 ("CX") at [31], the distinction between "custody" and "care and control" in the context of divorcing parents is that:

... "care and control" concerns day-to-day decision-making, while residual "custody" concerns the long-term decision-making for the welfare of the child.

The result of the order in the guardianship proceedings in 2010 was to remove from the husband any right to be involved in the long-term decision-making for the welfare of the triplets. I am not, of course, bound in any way by that decision. I therefore consider afresh whether it is right in the circumstances prevailing today for the husband to be granted joint custody of the triplets with the wife.

131 It is by now well-established that making an order for joint custody of a child of a marriage is the norm with an order for sole custody being exceptional: CX at [24]. The reason for this is that ordinarily, it is in the best interests of a child and promotes the child's welfare for the child to have the direct involvement of both parents in his life: CX at [26] and [27]. The making of a joint custody order also "reminds the parents that the law expects both of them to co-operate to promote the child's best interest": CX at [28].

132 The Court of Appeal made clear in CX that subsisting acrimony between the parents or a demonstrated inability to co-operate in decision-making affecting the child are not, in themselves, sufficiently exceptional circumstances to warrant a sole custody order. A sole custody order is warranted only where there are circumstances which indicate that a joint custody order would not be in the best interests of the child. The Court of Appeal (at [38]) gave the following as examples of such circumstances:

We agree with Assoc Prof Debbie Ong that the exceptional circumstances where sole custody orders are made may be where one parent physically, sexually or emotionally abuses the child ... or where the relationship of the parties is such that co-operation is impossible even after avenues of mediation and counselling have been explored, and the lack of cooperation is harmful to the child. ...

133 I do not consider it in the triplets' best interests for the husband to be involved in long-term decision-making for their welfare. I say that because the husband has, at least since 2008, demonstrated a very poor ability to make decisions even for his own welfare. Indeed, what he has shown is an ability to make decisions which are positively detrimental to his own welfare. I rely for this on: (i) his convictions for possession and consumption of illegal drugs; (ii) his promiscuous lifestyle (see [73] above); and (iii) the recklessness by which he is likely to have acquired his HIV positive status. When the husband has restored some order to his life and is able once again to demonstrate an ability to make long-term decisions for his own welfare over an extended period of time, the question of whether he should have an involvement in the long-term decision-making for the welfare of his triplets can be revisited.

134 In denying the husband's request for joint custody, I bear in mind also that the husband has committed a battery upon the wife. Although the battery did not cause her serious injuries and has not been repeated, his aggressive behaviour towards her continued even after 2010. All of this has combined to leave the wife in fear of having to deal with the husband, [\[note: 109\]](#) as she would have to if I were to order joint custody.

135 I should make it clear that I do not rely either on the husband's sexual orientation or on his HIV positive status as reasons in themselves for excluding him from custody of the triplets. The husband is in the same position as any parent, whatever the gender or sexual orientation, who has displayed the appallingly poor decision-making ability that the husband has in the recent past.

Access

136 I also decline to order any access for the husband which is more liberal than the two hours a week supervised access and the telephone access that is now in place. I have two reasons. First, the husband has not sought access to the triplets since June 2010 and only infrequently exercised the access which the wife voluntarily offered him before then. [\[note: 110\]](#) This was the case quite apart from his inability to take access during his imprisonment in 2013. There is also no evidence that he has been taking his supervised access with the triplets regularly after his release from prison in September 2013. Second, I do not consider it in the triplets' best interests to be exposed to the husband's reckless and dissolute lifestyle so long as that lifestyle continues.

137 It is also my view that the husband's existing access should continue to be supervised. First, the husband has on previous occasions deliberately failed to return the triplets to the wife after unsupervised access. [\[note: 111\]](#) In his oral submissions before me, without a trace of irony, the husband himself used the term "kidnap" to refer to his actions. Second, the father has shown a propensity not to act in the triplets' best interests when unsupervised. I have in mind the displays of temper towards the triplets and the use of physical force against one of the triplets which the wife relied upon in the personal protection proceedings and which the husband effectively admitted.

Costs

138 This being an uncontested divorce, I made no order as to costs.
